(A Papsr read before the Wisconsin Teachers Association in Madison, December 28, 1881.) It was justly remarked at the summer meeting of the Association, in a paper on a subject kindred to this, that this seems to be a question that will allow every man to ride his own hobby. The writer omitted to state what is equally true of the subject: that a little practical knowledge of an ungraded department, founded on experience, will most likely unhorse the rider and demolish his hobby. A chief criticism on the graded system of schools is that it is inflexible. Children are poured in at the hopper of the primary department, and the few who survive the grinding ordeal are turned out at the spout...
