Excerpt: .Two bodies incapable of combining, become so when one or the other has either been decomposed or supercomposed. In this case, the affinity of composition, which produces the union, takes the name of disposing affinity. 4th. Two or more compounds being placed in circumstances, suitable for bringing into play the respective affinities of their component parts; either there is a change and new products formed without our being able to determine which is the most powerful affinity under which they act, or the first composition remains, contrary to the order indicated by the superior affinity of the principle of one of the component parts to the affinity of the other. In these two cases we say that they are not the relations of affinity of one body to another, but affinities of concourse, otherwise called double affinities; in a word, the sum of all...
