Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Defence of the Right and the Duty of the American Union to Improve Its Navigable Waters: In a Speech Their opponents deny such improvements to be constitutional or necessary, or claim that, if necessary at all, they should be made solely by the separate States. It was some years, before the issue on this question was presented in the precise form I have above stated; but recent events have brought it distinctly in this shape before the American people; and it now forms the most prominent, among the features which distinguish the contending parties. In discussing the merits of the candidates now before us, I shall therefore seek to confine myself strictly to the attitude they respectively occupy, in relation to this great question. Above all I shall endeavor to avoid personalities, and shall cheerfully follow the example recently set by General Case, one of the moat eminent of our opponents, and admit at once that both the candidates are men of patriotism and honor. The fundamental position taken by the Whigs, who claim that the Nation should make the necessary River and Harbor improvements, is that the navigable waters of the United States, for all purposes of commerce known to the Constitution, are national waters. On the other hand, our opponents contend that those waters are not national, but local, and that their improvement should be exclusively committed to the respective States. They further propose that, for the purpose of such local improvements, Congress should now consent that each State may lay tonnage duties on that portion of our navigable waters falling within its limits. It is this latter proposition, comparatively of recent origin,...
