As the autumn approached, it seemed evident that it would be unwise for me to undertake a winter at Wellesley, and I must thank the Trustees for the cordial way in which they granted me a year s vacation. Happily, it was not necessary to avail myself of the whole of it, and I returned to college by the middle of May. As Commencement Day this year did not come until June 29th, I thus had more than six weeks of the very busiest of the college life. I must first of all express my warm appreciation of the able manner in which affairs had been conducted during my absence by the Dean and by the administrative officers associated with her. With the increasing number of students, the work of the Dean s office becomes more and more onerous, the entering class of 1908 numbering 414. The admission of so large a number involves an enormous amount of detail work, and the Dean s office force has had to be increased. These students have come to us very largely on certificate, and from all parts of the country. The various departments for taking care of the new students are now so well organized that the opening days move very smoothly; but it remains true that there is a great deal of work...
