Not illustrated. 1865 Excerpt: . reclaimed 200 more from heather, and planted 1,200 in the space of twenty years. In his speech at the public dinner which was given to the Captain A.d. 1838, in the Glen Ury Distillery at Stonehaven, he spoke much of the old roan, and termed him a heaven-born improver. The phrase did not apply to his grandfather, who was quite displeased with his son for carrying a bundle of trees on his back the fifteen miles from Aberdeen, and planting them in The Den of Ury. Protecting the plants, he said, would annoy people s cattle and sheep, and he wouldn t have them annoyed. This was just a year before his death, and allowance was to be made for the peevishness of age. When the Captain s father succeeded, he went to Norfolk, where he had first graduated in agriculture, to look out for some good ploughmen. The bosom of the earth at Ury knew peace no more; and turnips and artificial grasses appeared in due season. There were at least 2,000 acres of baulks, bogs, and rigs on the property, intersected with cairns of stones and muirland, and the lairds were more inclined to break each other s heads than the treasures of the earth. A smile ran through the company when the Captain gave this out in his deep, solemn tones. They remembered how many men he had backed and trained in his time, and thought him a fine, philosophic compound of...
