Excerpt: . . . or inflammation of them one of peculiar injury and suffering to the horse. When thus affected they are no longer able to perform the function of weight bearers, their power of withstanding the work imposed on them is lessened, and the pressure upon them gradually weakens and destroys their attachment to the hoof, letting the bones descend upon the sole, resulting in that condition of helplessness and disability known as founder. This indicates that when laminitis becomes firmly established or deep rooted, various complications are inevitable. Other organs are invaded, the parts affected become useless and the animal either becomes an incurable cripple or is soon relieved by death. This illustration gives a correct impression of the ravages of laminitis, when its processes continue to the chronic stage, whereby the joints, tendons and other structures of the foot are alike involved and their functions impaired. The disease has destroyed the laminal connections, a forced separation of the parts has N, Laminal tissue--the seat of laminitis. O, Fungous growth. P, Extensor tendon. R, Flexor perforatus.
