Not illustrated. 1869 Excerpt: . . . its black inhabitants, appeared to our missionaries very like a foretaste of purgatory. The Camboja started again on the 2d, doubled the Cape, and entered the Indian Ocean. Unfortunately it was the season for the monsoon, that terrible wind which threatens destruction to ships of every class. For nine days they were in the utmost peril, and so ill that death seemed almost a desirable alternative. Providence protected them, however, and they landed on the 11th at Point de Galle, in the island of Ceylon, there to recruit their exhausted strength for a few days. The missioners begged to be taken to the house of the Spanish Benedictine who had evangelised the island. This venerable man received them with the greatest cordiality. A grand funeral had at that moment attracted a large number of Indian converts, who eagerly pressed round the French missionaries to beg medals and rosaries from them, which they gladly distributed. The prince of the island, a recent convert also, begged to be allowed to pay them a visit. They received him with open arms, and after a time sang together an antiphon, of which the sense was as follows: The Indian, is he not our brother A son, like us, of the Eternal Father 1 Is there a foreign land for those whose home is only in heaven 1 If Aden appeared to Father Dorie a hell upon earth, Ceylon, as he wrote home, seemed to him a perfect terrestrial paradise, both...
